Lockheed Martin Names Jenna McMullin As Senior Vice President, Chief Communications Officer

BETHESDA, Md., March 24, 2026 – Lockheed Martin Corporation (NYSE: LMT) announced today Jenna McMullin as senior vice president and chief communications officer, effective immediately.

In this role, McMullin will lead the company's global communications organization and oversee enterprise communications strategy, media relations, brand, digital engagement, employee communications and stakeholder communications in support of Lockheed Martin's business priorities and mission.

"Jenna brings deep experience in strategic communications and a strong track record of leadership across complex, global organizations," said Stuart Holliday, chief public affairs officer. "She understands the importance of clear, trusted communication in advancing our mission and engaging our employees, customers and stakeholders around the globe. I'm confident Jenna will continue strengthening how we tell the Lockheed Martin story and support the important work our teams deliver every day."

McMullin brings more than 20 years of extensive experience in strategic communications, reputation management and organizational leadership across aerospace, defense and technology after beginning her career in communications as a civilian public affairs officer for the Air Force. She will work closely with senior leadership across the company to advance Lockheed Martin's communications strategy and strengthen engagement with employees, customers, partners and communities around the world.

"I'm grateful and honored to take on this role and work alongside the talented communications professionals across Lockheed Martin who help bring our mission to life every day," said McMullin. "Whether it's through powerful stories, impactful experiences or engaged conversations, effective communication plays a meaningful role in connecting our people, our purpose and the impact we deliver for our customers and communities. I'm proud of our company's mission and the incredible people behind it, and I look forward to strengthening how we share what we do and who we are."
